

PHINOT NATION DECLINED BY ALTER

Impossible for Himself and Wife to Go to Grey Towers Over Week-End, Says Telegram

WOULD MEET NOMINEE HERE

Attorney General Alter has declined the invitation of Gifford Pinchot to go to Grey Towers, the nominee's Pike County home, for the present week-end.

Mr. Alter sent a telegram stating that it would be impossible for Mrs. Alter and himself to make the pilgrimage, but he would be glad to make an appointment to meet Mr. Pinchot in this city some later date and talk over the matters that the candidate has in mind.

Mr. and Mrs. Barclay H. Warren, of this city, and Mr. and Mrs. Washington Scranton, women's Pinchot leaders in Scranton, will be among the guests at the Pinchot home at Mill-land, near the Pine Knot, Pa., where the Pinchot campaign in this city will also be among the guests.

Mr. Pinchot was expected here today in the afternoon. There were no guests, however, on the day ended last night with a whole-hearted reception by his townspeople.

They gathered ostensibly to witness the graduation exercises of the Millford High School, but as a matter of fact many of them went to do honor to their distinguished neighbor.

Mr. Pinchot was the commencement speaker. After the exercises there was a general handshaking, and finally every Republican in the Millford village was on hand, and even the one who was voted for Alter is suspected of having been present.

The thirteen graduates were first given opportunity to tell how they thought the world ought to be run, and the candidate gave the boys and girls a list of his characteristics, and finally gave an address in which he should first lay an ideal and then go unswervingly to its attainment.

He told the class of personal relations with success and with their own explanations for their successes. He told them brains alone get them nowhere without character to back them.

Mr. Pinchot still maintains silence as to the selection of a chairman for the State Committee, which will organize at a meeting here next Saturday.

Mr. Pinchot is in his fight for control of the committee, has again changed his plans, this time trotting out Representative Aaron Hess, of Lancaster, as the "best possible man" for the chairmanship.

Mr. Hess throughout his legislative career has been a Grundy lieutenant. If he actually enters the field for the chairmanship, it will be in opposition to W. G. Wright, of Lancaster, who lined up that county in the Pinchot column at the primary.

Mr. Pinchot is said to stand with the nominee on the question of the chairmanship, although those who are lacking W. Harry Baker for the post by the Delaware delegation, the nomination of Mr. Pinchot is a matter of course.

It has been learned that the head of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association is seeking to enlist the aid of Henry Mellon in the chairmanship fight.

Mr. Grundy called on Mr. Mellon at the Treasury yesterday, but whatever it was they talked about, he evidently made little headway. At the conclusion of the conference the Secretary said that "Mr. Grundy came down to interest me in a certain matter," but he would not say what the matter was.

"IT'S TOO QUIET—I CAN'T HEAR YOU"

DEAF MAN NEEDS CLATTER OF BOILER FACTORY TO HEAR

War Victim Overcomes Handicap When Airplane Motors Sputter Forth Ear-Splitting Roars and He Detects Lowest Whisper

That's what James J. A. Moran (left) is saying to A. Livingston Allan (right) in their airplane at Atlantic City, where they have gone for a "quiet chat." Moran, a motor expert, lost his hearing in the war, but strangely enough can hear the slightest whisper when he is surrounded by the roar of his beloved motors.

"Pardon me, but will you step into this boiler factory. I can't hear you." This invitation might under ordinary circumstances be considered just good natured banter on the part of a sane man, but it is quite another thing when tendered by James J. A. Moran, of 1834 Ingersoll street.

James is deaf as a post—with one exception. Let him get his ear snug against the exhaust of a twelve-cylinder Liberty Motor hitting on all twelve, and he can hear the veriest whisper you may utter.

Yes, it is not much on conversation. James lost his hearing in the war. He was an expert on motors, and his job was to test out the big Liberty's and Rolls-Royce Engines that propelled the combat and observation planes over the front.

For ten, fifteen and often twenty hours a day, when the fighting was still, James would work in the hangars, tuning up the big motors, and listening with expert ear to the minute sub-sounds that indicate trouble within.

SALOONMAN SHOT BY BOOTLEGGERS

John Dunn, Proprietor at Fifty-sixth and Market Streets, in Serious Condition

OWN GUN MISSES FIRE

Two bootleggers shot down a saloon-keeper who refused to deal with them early last night and escaped in an automobile before any one in the saloon could interfere.

The man shot is John Dunn, whose place is at the southeast corner of Fifty-sixth and Market streets. He is fifty years old and the father of five children. At the Misericordia Hospital it is said his chances for recovery are good, although he has a bullet through his right lung and another in his side.

Dunn was standing behind the bar, talking with three customers, when two more men entered the saloon and sauntered toward the rear end of the room. They leaned against the bar and motioned for Dunn. He walked toward them, and the three engaged in earnest conversation.

Suddenly, as the argument between the saloonkeeper and the two men became more heated, one of the men drew a revolver and fired pointblank across the bar at him. The bullet struck him in the back of his head, and both men pulled the trigger at about the same time.

Dunn's weapon missed fire, and a bullet from the bootlegger's gun plowed through his lung. He fell in a heap behind the bar. Meanwhile the other bootlegger turned and gave the saloonkeeper a second shot in the back of the head. He fell to the floor. They turned, ran to a waiting automobile and drove rapidly out Market street.

Dunn was taken to the hospital, and for a long time was too weak to make any statement. All he could murmur was "Ask Bob about it. Bob can tell you." Lieutenant Duffy, of the Fifth and Pine streets station, and Magistrate Muggan at once instituted a search for Bob, but he had escaped.

ONLY LIVING SON OF 1776

HERO FOUND IN PITMAN, N. J.

David C. Montgomery, 92, is Passing Twilight of Long Life on Little Farm

Daughter Only Companion of Aged Man Who Cannot Recall Bygone Days

DAVID C. MONTGOMERY reaching his nineties. He died in comparative poverty because the struggle with the land was in those days a bitter business. Besides his many marriages had left many children.

So far as is known, the only living child of a Revolutionary fighter is one David C. Montgomery, now living in an obscure corner of Pitman, N. J. The distinction is more or less a secret from the townspeople, by virtue of the senility which is at last settling over his unusual faculties and the reticence of his only living child, Mrs. Ida Pleasant, whose life is now spent in caring for him.

Old as Cap'n Montgomery is now, and as irresponsible, even to the simple task of telling his own age, there is in his aspect every suggestion of the pioneer and none whatever of the metropolitan. For as long as there are records of the history of the American Montgomerys, it is a story of battling and battling against nature—against land and water.

The legend which has come down, almost altogether by word of mouth, is that in the middle of the eighteenth century the younger sons of Castle Montgomery, who were the first of the emigrants to the colonies. Their names were Joseph, Alexander, Robert and William Montgomery. The latter settled in the New Jersey forests near what is now the town of Bridgeton. What became of the others is not known, though lately there has grown reason to believe that Alexander Montgomery was the one of the same name who acquired a reputation in Brooklyn and whose heirs are sought.

At just what time and why William Montgomery chose to throw his lot with the revolutionaries is not why, he, a Highlander, went to so far as to emigrate into the army there are no means of knowing. It is known that in 1776 he was a seaman aboard the Commodore Hopkins that attacked the British fleet of Lord Dunmore in the Chesapeake.

Was Imprisoned by British This, it should be remembered, was not the brigantine Wasp whose engagement with the Frolic made a brilliant page in American naval history. The Wasp was at one time taken by the British, and Montgomery with it. He was later imprisoned in the fortress at St. John's, N. B., and brutally treated. His captors were allowed to appropriate and though at length they healed, he was left lame for the remainder of his life. However, he was a man of remarkable hardiness.

After the war Montgomery returned to New Jersey, married one, twice, three times—maybe often. He worked the land. At the age of sixty-nine he married Mrs. Ida Pleasant, a daughter of a prominent family, and she, too, was a woman of remarkable hardiness.

RECORDS TORN FROM DIER BOOK

Criminal Laws Were Frequently Violated, Attorney for Receiver Charges

GRAND JURY ACTION SEEN

"Pages on which were listed thousands of dollars' worth of securities received by E. D. Dier & Co., from Charles A. Stoneham & Co., when Dier took over the business of this millionaire, were torn from the books in the bankruptcy of Dier & Co. shortly before the $4,000,000 crash, and I am going to find out why it was done."

Arthur Garfield Hays, attorney for the receiver in the Dier failure, the man who is digging deep into the affairs of this bankrupt, gave out the above statement today. Hays, who has a force of seventeen accountants checking the activities of Dier and his associates, declared the conditions that have been revealed by examination of the books are full of violations of criminal laws. He says he is certain the Grand Jury, which begins Monday its probe of the Dier failure, will speedily indict those responsible.

"It is almost impossible to enumerate the irregularities that have been unearthed in Dier's office," continued Mr. Hays, "and the destruction of records and the carrying of fictitious margin accounts are but a few of many problems that confront the accountants."

"At present we are mostly concerned in the disappearance of upward of $2,000,000 in securities that the books show should have been in the strong box January 16 last, the day of Dier's failure. We located about $100,000 of the securities, and I think we may be able to trace a great many more. We do know that many of them were sold outright, and if we can trace these we will make an effort to recover."

Fred Andrews, ex-cashier of the defunct Dier house, still holds the spotlight in the hearings being conducted by Mr. Hays, after being grilled unmercifully by Mr. Hays, was forced to admit that while he was being paid $500 per week to do the work of a cashier, he spent most of his time looking after six speculative accounts that he carried in Dier's books.

Andrews, as on previous occasions, had no memory until it was refreshed by the production of checks and other data and he walked away at Andrews with a broadside that had the ex-cashier gasping for breath.

FAMOUS ROSE GARDENS THROWN OPEN

The rose gardens of E. M. Rosenbluth, Wallingford, Pa., said to contain the greatest collection of blooms in the State, will be opened to the public tomorrow and also June 11. Among the 1300 plants are 250 varieties of roses, many of which have been brought to perfection only after years of an elimination process. Many importations are among the collection, doubly valuable at present because of the embargo which has cut off the supply from Japan, France and Holland.
